

accidents don't have to happen

Local Authority Approaches to Managing Water Safety – Scotland Five Years On

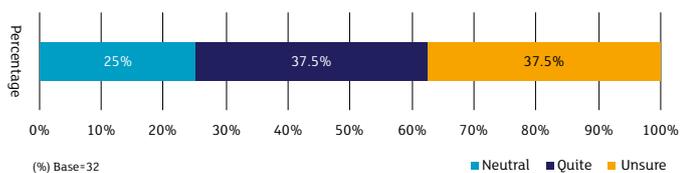

Responsibility for managing water safety is a key policy issue for RoSPA. This summary focusses on the results of research into the approaches adopted by local authorities in Scotland. It is a five-year follow-on study from the original research which took place in Scotland in 2013. To see the full report please go to: www.rospa.com/about/around-the-uk/scotland/water-safety/

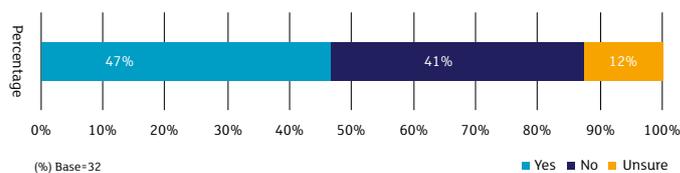

For further information, please contact: communitysafety@rospa.com

2018 Dashboard Key Results

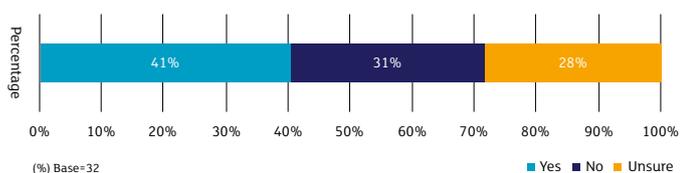

Relative importance of managing water safety

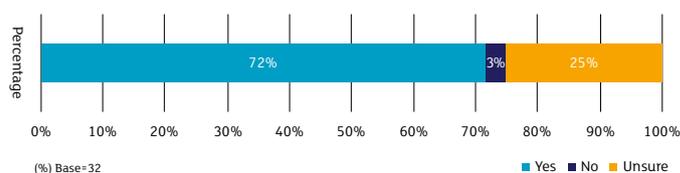

Identifiable lead on water safety

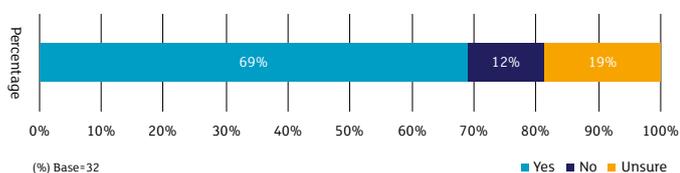

Policy level commitment to water safety

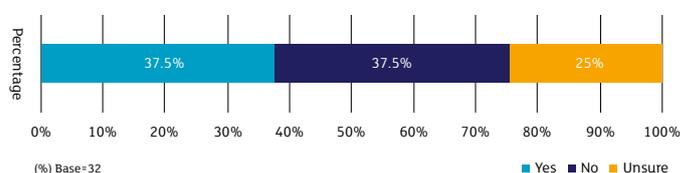

Awareness of local group involvement in water activity

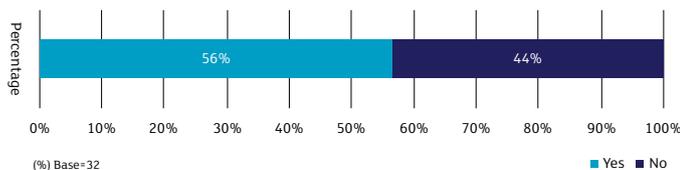

Work with local agencies in water safety

Running of a water safety campaign:

Awareness of Scotland's Drowning Prevention Strategy

2013 Vs 2018 Dashboard Key Results

Question	Percentage 2013	Percentage 2018	Percentage Difference
Relative importance of managing water safety	69	75	6
Identifiable leads on water safety	44	47	3
Policy level commitment to water safety	44	41	-3
Awareness of local group involvement in water activity	69	72	3
Work with other agencies in water safety	79	69	-10
Running of a water safety campaign	25	38	13
Info provided to key groups	64	50	-14

To see the full report please go to: www.rospace.com/about/aroundthe-uk/scotland/water-safety/